Joe I finished school when I was sixteen. I didn't like it. I didn't think I was very clever and the teachers said I was stupid. I worked in a factory as a forklift truck driver, but I got bored after a few years. Five years ago I went back to college to study plumbing and gas installation. It was much better than school. I passed my NVQ and now I work for British Gas.	Fatima I loved school. After I finished secondary school I went to college to do my 'A' levels. I studied French, History, Art and Geography. Then I went to university where I studied European History and French. I liked university and when I finished I decided that I wanted to work in a school. I did my teacher training qualification and now I work in a secondary school. I teach History and French.
Michael I didn't go to school very much when I was young. I didn't have time because I helped my family on our farm in the mountains. When I came to Britain I wanted to train as an electrician, but the English was too difficult for me. I went to college and did a food hygiene course so I could work in a restaurant. It was easy. Now I work as a waiter in an Italian restaurant in the town centre.	Mohammed I got one GCSE when I was sixteen. I hated school. I wanted to make money. I got a job cleaning cars in a car show room. The manager liked me and in a year, I was selling more cars than any other salesman. Now, I own five car show rooms in the city. I have a big house and I drive a Porsche. Who needs school?
